

Formosan aboriginal culture village location

Slow day, hardly anyone thereThis place is clean and the people are friendly. The food options were somewhat limited. Apparently only about 2/3 of the place was a little awkward. The plus side was that there were no lines for the journeys. The Aboriginal villages are interesting and we have learned a lot about indigenous cultures in Taiwan.... Date of Experience: June 20201 Helpful VoteHelpfulPierce B wrote a review Jan 202023 posts6 helpful voices-irst I thought the fusion of a cultural village, and a theme park seemed to be a bit sticky... But these guys pull it off really well. The gondola ride up the hill is really nice (short but great view of the lake). There is also a gondola that goes over the park, which we then took back to the main gondola, and it shows a beautiful view over the gentle hills/mountains. Cultural villages were really well done with wax figures demonstrating the people of each tribe, and they have set up their own villages within the park. The people who work there are all of indigenous heritage. Some nice employees who work there in the stalls, who like to talk about their heritage. The amusement park, which was intense. Good day and worth the entrance fee. We went as a family (adult children 30+ and our mother), so we took the time to walk through every village before we went to the adventure park.... Date of experience: December 2019jolinpl wrote a review Jan 2020Singapore497 posts208 helpful voicesThere are two entrances to the park. One is from the cable car from The Sonnenmondsee, the other at the park entrance itself. On January 2nd&3nd 20, the cable car was closed for maintenance. We entered the park from the main park entrance fee was about 40 dollars per person. Near the entrance were the rides such as water rafting and Splash mountain. There was also an arcade area and a play area where we spent almost an hour fishing for tiny rubber fish with paper nets. 7 nets for 100NT. As soon as the net breaks, the game is over. We won two Pikachu cuddly toys! Lunch was in the burger and chicken joint. Then we took the skyline cable car ride inside the park to the other entrance where were the Aboriginal shows, exhibits and games. You can either walk down what we did (very easy to walk about 30-45 min) or take back the skyline. We played archery, bubbled darts and had a good time watching an Aboriginal lady show us how glass beads. Many of the restaurants were closed, but so we slammed on sausages. Loved the fact that there are so many taps on the way for people to wash their hands. All in all, a nice 4 hours spent in the park. There was also a huge souvenir shop Park entrance from which we came. ... Date of experience: January 2020Sheepeth wrote a report Dec 2019Bristol, United Kingdom28 contributions12 helpful voicesWe drove the beautiful cable car up the hill and planned to then walk up the mountain from the path that starts at the gates of the park. However, you are not allowed to enter the path from the cable car station unless you pay for the entrance to the amusement park! We could have just walked through in 5 minutes, but we were asked to go all the way back to the city and get the bus back to the park to reach the Trailhead! That's what money and greed does to enjoy our ability to enjoy the landscape!! (Also the question of who benefits from this cultural use park, because the ethnic group celebrated by this park is almost wiped out and most live in poverty - is it ethical to use their culture to make themselves rich?? I wonder....) ... Date of Experience: December 2019Ginger wrote a review Dec 2019Singapore, Singapore262 posts26 helpful voices2 in 1 (Culture & amp; Theme Park) Never expect to see a 2 in 1 village. The view from the top of the cable car was amazing. Children enjoy the amusement park more than anything else. Consider, this is a 2 in 1, the theme park is actually not very big. Apart from the annoying rides, most are suitable for younger children.
